Should we blame cash transfer?

Harun Yahya, along with some others, might claim that the main reason for the Indonesian government's failure to solve the conflict in Iraq is the lack of cash transfer. However, it is not the cash transfer but the military strategy that is the main reason for the Indonesian government's failure to solve the conflict in Iraq.

On the other hand, an exclusive in which people do not receive the benefit. These two errors are important because we always want governments to conduct the right policy to address the right people.

The effect of cash transfers on the economy is a complex issue. It is not clear whether giving money to people who are in need is a good idea. It might be a good idea if the money is used for productive purposes. However, if the money is used for consumption, it might not be a good idea.

Another thing that is important to consider is the quality of the cash transfer. If the money is given to people who are in need, it might be a good idea. However, if the money is given to people who are not in need, it might not be a good idea.

Health as other considerations of poverty. Considering conditional cash transfers, another form of cash transfer, it is important to consider the quality of the cash transfer. If the money is given to people who are in need, it might be a good idea.

In the first type of society, cash transfers without any conditions might work well because people know that they have to use their money for basic needs, education, housing and health as their priorities.

Astana peace talks: Diplomacy wins over military once again

It is no doubt that the Syria issue has been on the global agenda for the last six years. Many have been struggling to find a way out of the conflict since 2011. The conflict has been going on for six years now. It is time to find a way out of the conflict.

The cards in front of the participants were named as "Syrian Arab Republic" instead of "government" or "opposition".

President Donald Trump's executive order banning travel and entry from seven countries is only the latest test of dark forces in America. The executive order is a test of the strength of the American government.

Among the nations affected, these seven countries are Iran, Iraq, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen. These countries have been targeted by the American government.

300,000 refugees from various nations in 2016, following close to one million in 2015. The U.S. has accepted more refugees than any other country in the world.

The government of the U.S. has been struggling to deal with the refugee crisis. The government has been trying to find a way to deal with the refugees.

Astana peace talks was a great success at bringing the armed opposition, Syrian regime, Iran, Russia and Turkey altogether for the table for the first time in an international meeting to help negotiate and settle the conflict. It was noteworthy to see the wide attendance of the armed opposition whereas only political opposition used to partake in such assemblies. It was remarkable to see the cards in front of the participants were named as "Syrian Arab Republic" instead of "government" or "opposition". It was Turkey that convinced these opposition groups to come to the table as a result of a series of meetings in Ankara. The groups who did not participate in Astana meetings were also adhering to the 31st December ceasefire. The ultimate aim of these talks was to extend the ceasefire and find solutions to end the civil war. The exclusion of PYD was important both because it is affiliated with the PKK that the UN that the UN and Turkey consider as terrorists and they would not gain legitimacy to their erroneous claims that they are representing the Kurds. As a matter of fact, PYD has leverage on Kurds only by means of armed forces.
