Counter bigotry through knowledge and wisdom

Harun Yahya | 03 Jun 2016.

There have been 68 great massacres around the world since the end of the Second World War and about 85 million people have lost their lives in these massacres:

11 million of the 85 million people who lost their lives were Muslims. Furthermore, nine out of ten Muslims who died in these conflicts were killed by other Muslims. The majority of the Muslim massacres occurred during conflicts that reached civil war proportions. The second significant cause of these massacres is regional power struggles between neighboring countries.

In the Chinese civil wars and through the practices of the communist regime, 40 million; in the Stalin Era and the post-Stalin Soviet Union, 10 million; in the Ethiopian Civil War, 8 million; in the Zaire-Congo Wars, 4 million; in the Korean War, 2.5 million; in the Sudanese Civil Wars, 2 million; in the Khmer Rouge Cambodian Genocide, 1.8 million; in the Vietnam War, 1.8 million; in the Afghan Civil Wars – both during and after the Soviet occupation, 1.8 million; and in the Pakistani Civil War and the Bangladesh Liberation War, 1.7 million people lost their lives.

Religion was certainly not the reason behind Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and its going to war against Iran. The Libyan-Egyptian Wars broke out in an attempt to seize the control of the oil fields in the region and the Suez Canal. The Afghan, Sudanese, and Algerian civil wars were waged over who would hold power. Many conflicts purported as Shiite-Sunni disputes actually stemmed from economic or ethnic reasons. When Hafez al-Assad perpetrated the Hama massacre and when Saddam slaughtered Kurdish Muslims in Halabja with chemical weapons, their sole purpose was to strengthen their rule.

None of the wars in the Middle East were waged on religious grounds, yet during these wars, religious motives were cynically exploited as leverage and many elements that served to whip up war fever came into play. These elements mostly consisted of religious fanatics.

It was the USA that occupied Iraq; there is no doubt that the Iraqi people suffered enormously because of this occupation. However,
