Refugees Are The Victims Of The Paris Attacks, Not Its Perpetrators

WORLD & POLITICS

They drown in the relentless waters of Aegean and Mediterranean Seas, see their babies drown and wash ashore, even sometimes have their dinghies intentionally sunk, suffocate in the back of trucks, chased away with pepper sprays and water cannons despite the presence of children and babies, struck with batons, dragged on the streets, shut in wire cages, and subjected to inhumane treatment, all of which occur in the European Union. A Union supposedly built on the principles of superior human rights and law. And now, as if all of this wasn't enough, some people try to blame them for the Paris attacks.

They are the refugees, whose ordeal is on TV everyday. They have a single goal in mind: fleeing their now-inhabitable countries, fleeing bombs, terror and war so that hopefully they can reach countries where they can live safely and peacefully with their families.

However, certain circles that have always been against the idea of accepting them to Europe, didn't hesitate to use Paris attacks as a pretense to do that. Marie Le Pen, the leader of French National Frontier, urged an immediate halt of intake of the migrants; her justification was that there was the possibility that there could be ISIS members amongst the refugees. Batılı devletler önemli bir sınavdan geçiyor. Sahip oldukları güçlü maddi, ekonomik ve teknolojik imkanlarla mülteci sorununa acil çözümler üretebilirler. Umulur ki çaresiz durumdaki mültecilere sevgiyle kucak açarlar ve savundukları özgürlük, eşitlik, kardeşlik, adalet, sevgi, dayanışma gibi güzel değerleri bir kez daha sahiplenirler. Zira aksi uygulamalar ve önlemler gittikçe artan şiddet olaylarına davetiye çıkaracaktır.
